Richard seemed to genuinely care about each of the students' grasp of the subject. He is very patient and kind, and seems to be a very competent mathematician. He is understanding when people are having difficulty, but he is not overly lenient. Sometimes he tends to meander in the lecture, which a few students complained about. I was impressed that he individually hand-graded everyone's homework assignment, so I got frequent feedback on how I was doing. I would have appreciated more time to work out problems with the other students during class. Overall, however, he ran a very enjoyable course.
